Inside the front flap, which fastens with buckles, there is a side pocket with a zipper—perfect for small essentials such as keys, a boarding pass, or snacks. The flap features a zipper running along three sides, allowing the backpack to open like a suitcase. This provides easy and convenient access to its contents. A stiffening flap is sewn into the center of the backpack to reinforce the entire bottom surface—it can also be folded toward the back to tighten the straps at the front and reduce the backpack’s width.

Top and Sides of the Backpack

At the top of the backpack, there is a foam-padded handle, as well as a zippered pocket that fastens from the back. On both sides, there is a pocket with a sewn-in elastic band that holds a bottle in place or keeps the pocket snug against the backpack when it’s empty. There is also a sewn-in handle on the side that allows you to carry the backpack across its width, just like a suitcase.

Back of the backpack

The backpack also fastens with a zipper on the back. Inside, there are two pockets secured simultaneously with Velcro—one taller and wider, which can hold a 17-inch laptop, and the other shorter and narrower, which can hold a 13-inch tablet. On the other side at the bottom, there is a zippered pocket. It is sewn into a panel that fastens along three sides; this panel is equipped with two zippers and a red pull tab that, when pulled, allows both zippers to be opened simultaneously. The backpack can be carried in many ways. The shoulder straps on the back are padded with foam to increase comfort—their length can be adjusted, as can the length of the buckle-fastened chest strap. The back is padded with foam panels. A strap runs along the back through which you can thread the handle of a suitcase to carry the backpack comfortably.
